

Cruelty Free Shopping Guide 2006/2007

Introduction

There are three basic categories products fall into. The first is the ones listed here from companies that give a cut off date. This means that from the date stated they will not use any ingredients that have been tested on animals. So obviously the older the cut off date the better the company and product.

There are some companies in this category that we have not listed, the most well known is the Body Shop who have a cut off date of 1990. This is because they are owned by one of the largest animal tested cosmetic producers in the world, L'Oreal. We feel it would be hypocritical on our part to list them as all the profits made by the Body Shop will go to the animal testers at L'Oreal.

The second category is the companies that have a rolling 5 year date like Ecover. This to us is a con because the date moves ie the date they will not use products tested after in 2006 is 2001, yet in 2007 this moves to 2002 and so on. This allows these companies to say their products are not tested on animals when in reality they are and their policy is meaningless. We would advise you never to buy these products and to stick to the products listed here.

The third category is companies who test their products on animals. Three of the biggest animal testers are L'Oreal, Proctor & Gamble (P&G) and Unilever (Lever Bros) these companies and others are to be avoided at all costs as they kill, maim and mutilate thousands of animals every single year.

The basic rule of thumb is if a product does not say 'Not tested on Animals' then it is. Then the next step is if it says 'Not tested on Animals' what is that companies policy. At this point it is time to consult this guide. If there is any company you are not sure about then please contact us for clarification. Please bear in mind that this is a UK guide, if you live in the U.S. then please consult Peta (People for the Ethical Treatment of animals) www.peta.org
